Cases of Mistaken Identity That Have Resulted in Great Hard-

ERRORS OF ENGLISH COURT

ships.

Every year sees a number of innocent men wrongly convicted, and while in some cases proofs of these judicial errors come to hand after the victims have served but a few months' imprisonment, in many instances the mistakes are not found out until after those convicted have served their fuil sentence.

The public rarely hears of these mistakes of justice, says London Answers, and yet in 1897 31 men and women were released and granted a free pardon after having been wrongly imprisoned for over four months. In none of thesa cases was the victim granted any compensation, nor does the law entitle them to redress in any shape or form, while not so much as a written or unwritten apology is their lot.

In cases of mistaken identity, similar to that of Adolph Beck, there are very few precedents of compensatory bounty having been granted, while those on record do not show a dispensation of very large sums. However. some 60 years ago a most flagrant instance of miscarriage of justice occurred. A weilknown solicitor named Barber was, after a long trial, convicted of forgery and was sentenced to transportation for

A considerable time elapsed before proofs turned up which infallibly proved that justice had erred. In this case it was felt that there were moral and intellectual claims for compensation for suffering which had been borne so long, so terribly and so undeservedly on the shoulders of an innocent man. A long debate was held to determine the exact sum of money which could, in some measure at least, make up for the personal agony which the victim had undergone, and eventually the house of commons ordered the wronged man a bounty of £5,000. Some three years ago a man from New Zealand was brought to Colchester. charged with having committed murder. Eventually, however, the case against him was dismissed, and taking into account the fearful strain which he innocent man must have suffered, the treasury granted him £600.

The largest sum which has ever been granted in almost exactly similar conditions to those under which Adolph Beck wrongfully suffered imprisonment occurred exactly 28 years ago, when a man named Habron was convicted of murder at Manchester. Fortunately, proofs of his innocence turned up, but not until some time later. Never had justice committed a greater mistake, and although it was felt that it would be impossible adequately to compensate the victim of this extraordinary case of mistaken identity, he was only granted a sum of £1,000.

There are numerous cases of mistakes identity in which the wrongfully convicted man has not received one penny of compensation. In 1895 a man named Stewart was charged with being an escaped convict. He firmly protested that his name was Stickler, but the evidence was so strong against him that he was sent back to prison. Two years elapsed before the police arrested a man who was exactly like Stewart, and then it was discovered that this man was the erstwhile missing jailbird. Stickler, of course, was immediately released, but could claim no redress, and his only consolation was that he had not been compelled to serve the full sentence.

The exact value of circumstantial evidence is a much discussed question. William Shaw, some years ago, was hanged on circumstantial evidence for the murder of his daughter. About a year after his execution the tenant who rented Shaw's house discovered a letter written by the supposed murdered girl, in which she stated that as the man she loved had jilted her, she had made up her mind to commit suicide. The authorities were, of course, unable to expiate this terrible mistake; but the dead man's body was handed over to his relatives of reinterment. while flags were waved over the grave, and prominent officials attended the funeral in token that Shaw's innocence was recognized.

Curious English Trade Custom. The burning of the Dunlop-Welch tyre specifications at the banquet in commemoration of the expiration of the patents recalls another curious trade custom. In some parts of the country, when a public house loses its license the signboard is solemnly buried. On the last night it is removed from over the door and "waked" in the bar by the old customers. When the clock points to closing time and the house ceases its career as an inn the signboard is carried out in procession and interred with an appropriate burial service, which ends with watering the grave with a gallon of beer or a bottle of whisky.

Child's Image on Bank-Notes. The accepted design for the new Austrian five-kroner bank notes, which will be shortly issued, is remarkable for the picture of an unusually beautiful child's head, which forms its chief ornament. The model for this head was the son of Prinz Franz Josef Rohan, whom the artist saw one day in the street, and with whose beauty he was so much struck that he asked for the child's name, and obtained the parents' permission to make a drawing of him for this purpose.

A narcotic bomb has been invented by an Austrian surgeon which may be fired from any gun. The bomb has a time fuse, and when dropped among a regiment of the enemy will not explode, but will fill the air with narcotic gases strong enough to make 2,000 men unconscious for several hours.
